

Corruption in the public and private sectors: the impact on human rights in third countries

2013/2074(INI) - 19/08/2013 - Committee report tabled for plenary, single reading

The Committee on Foreign Affairs adopted the report by Ana GOMES (S&D, PT) on corruption in the public and private sectors: the impact on human rights in third countries.

Members recalled that, according to the World Bank, corruption represents 5% of global GDP (USD 2.6 trillion), with over USD 1 trillion paid in bribes each year and that it adds up to 10% of the total cost of doing business on a global basis and 25 % of the cost of procurement contracts in developing countries.

They also noted that each year USD 20-40 billion, corresponding to 20-40% of official development assistance, is stolen from public budgets in developing countries.

With this in mind, Members believed that the EU can only become a credible and influential leader in the fight against corruption if it addresses the problems of organised crime, corruption and money laundering within its own borders in an adequate manner.

Although welcoming, in this regard, various initiatives taken at European level including the renegotiation of the Savings Taxation Directive, meant effectively to end banking secrecy, Members considered that these actions are not sufficiently ambitious and that the EU should follow the example of the United States in enacting the Sergei Magnitsky Rule of Law Accountability Act of 2012 and adopt similar legislation at EU level by establishing a common EU list of officials involved in the death of Sergei Magnitsky.

They also called on the Commission to draw up an action plan, with a view to creating a mechanism for listing and imposing similar targeted sanctions against officials of third countries (including police officers, prosecutors and judges) involved in grave human rights violations and judicial ‘manipulations’ against whistleblowers, journalists reporting on corruption and human rights activists in third countries.

Accountability and transparency of external aid and public budgets: Members supported the EU’s commitment to embrace and mainstream throughout its development policies the concept of democratic ownership, that is, the effective and full participation of people in the design, implementation and monitoring of development strategies and policies of donors and partner governments. Such a policy fosters involvement of programme beneficiaries and therefore contributes to greater monitoring and accountability in the fight against corruption. To ensure that the blending facilities expand the effectiveness of development finance, the governance of those instruments needs to be reviewed. They therefore called on the Commission to impose the highest levels of integrity in the procurement processes for implementation of EU-funded projects. This approach would benefit all concerned, including associations of land-owners as well as disadvantaged groups.

Members also urged the EU to further transparency by supporting the creation of a global system to track aid pledges, in order to be able to hold donor countries to their promises of aid and to hold them accountable for the projects, institutions or groups that they support. They suggested that the Commission publicise the reporting mechanisms within OLAF regarding misuse of EU funds among participants in public tenders and beneficiaries of EU aid.

Several other measures were proposed such as:

- greater transparency on the beneficiaries of funding;

- enhanced controls;
- initiatives from the international financial institutions (IMF, World Bank) to evaluate the risk of corruption and bolstering transparency (for example, the “Publish What You Pay” initiative).

Corruption and development policies: emphasising that the poorest people in developing countries, being heavily reliant on public services, are hurt disproportionately by petty corruption, Members called for greater consistency in development policies stressing that EU assistance in the areas of fiscal governance and action on tax fraud needs to be increased under its development funding instruments.

Improving Member States’ jurisdiction: Members requested the Member States to amend their criminal laws, where necessary, to establish jurisdiction over individuals of any nationality found on their territory who have committed acts of bribery or embezzlement of public funds, regardless of where the crime occurred.

They also urged the Member States, as recommended by the UNCAC, to adopt legislative and other measures to establish intentionally committed illicit enrichment – that is, a significant increase in the assets of a public official that he or she cannot reasonably explain in relation to his or her lawful income – as a criminal offence

Capacity building of anti-corruption institutions: Members called on the EU and the Member States to initiate the development of international standards on the independence and effectiveness of anti-corruption authorities, drafted intergovernmentally with the aim of final adoption by the UN General Assembly. They urged the EU and its Member States to foster and show support for the creation of an International Commission Against Corruption established by an international treaty or by a Protocol to the UNCAC, which would give rise to an international body of criminal investigators endowed with equivalent powers of national law enforcement and prosecution authorities to investigate and prosecute crimes of corruption in domestic territories of the signatory States, and being able also to indict individuals in national criminal courts. They also invited the Member States to support the establishment of a UN Special Rapporteur on financial crime, corruption and human rights.

Corporate responsibility: Members requested all EU enterprises to fulfil their corporate responsibility to respect human rights in line with the UN Guiding Principles. They called for the development of more effective transparency and accountability standards for EU technology companies in connection with the export of technologies that can be used to violate human rights.

They also urged the Commission to propose legislation requiring EU companies to ensure that their purchases do not support perpetrators of corruption, conflicts and grave human rights violations. They reiterated the need for the EU and the Member States to take appropriate measures to monitor and eventually sanction companies based on their territory which are involved in corruption in third countries. A public list of companies which have been convicted of corrupt practices or whose company officials are being indicted for corrupt practices in Member States or third countries should be published. They also welcomed the agreements reached between the European Parliament and the Council requiring companies in the extractive sector and loggers of primary forests to disclose payments to governments on a country and project basis and called for this practice to be extended.

Peace and stability operations: Members stressed that corruption often fuels crime and contributes to conflict and fragility of countries. They called, therefore, on the UN to take steps to ensure that those who are victimised by peacekeepers have the right to remedy, and to improve reporting mechanisms and the whistleblower protection policy.

Members also called on the Union and its Member States to support:

- the creation of the oversight mechanism of the International Anti-Corruption Code of Conduct;

- the creation of an international framework regulating the activities of military and private security companies, that would include dissuasive sanctions.

International cooperation and assistance: Members recommended that Member States enhance the implementation of Chapters IV (International Cooperation) and V (Asset Recovery) of UNCAC, especially to grant more efficiency to mutual legal assistance requested by third countries.

They encouraged the Commission to propose in the next revision of the Cotonou Agreement the respect of good governance as an essential element of the Agreement and to widen the scope of the definition of corruption, allowing the sanctioning of breaches of the good governance clause in all serious circumstances, and not only when related to economic and sectoral policies and programmes on which the European Union is a significant partner in terms of the financial support

Welcoming the initiatives taken in the context of the Arab Spring (recovery of dictators' assets), Members called on the Union and its Member States to provide legal and technical assistance to developing countries that wish to recover stolen assets (or assets accumulated illegally by dictatorships) that are held in the territory of the European Union.

Lastly, they encouraged the Union to ensure greater vigilance in relation to European arms manufacturers' exports and to combat opaqueness in the arms trade sector, especially in relation to the use of intermediaries and economic/industrial offsets.
