

Social protection for all, including self-employed workers

2013/2111(INI) - 14/01/2014 - Text adopted by Parliament, single reading

The European Parliament adopted by 587 votes to 65, with 39 abstentions, a resolution on social protection for all, including self-employed workers.

The resolution looked at the degree to which social protection rights were granted in self-employment and in new forms of employment, noting that in 2012, self-employment represented more than 15 % of total employment in the EU. However, Members found in some cases, it was not the preferred option of the person concerned, but rather a necessity owing to a lack of other job opportunities or sufficiently flexible working arrangements to combine work and care for dependents. Members also noted that economically dependent self-employed workers were rarely represented by trade unions, even if they were more likely to be victims of working time and other abuses.

Social security for all: Parliament called on the Member States to ensure sustainable long-term financing of social security systems, particularly in periods of economic crisis, as well as to develop the preventive arm of social security systems and place greater emphasis on activating measures, while not overlooking the fact that one of the most important aspects of social investments is the fact that they enable the reconciliation of social and economic goals and may contribute in the long term to retaining and developing the economy. It considered, in this connection, that social investments should be viewed as just that – investments, rather than expenditure.

Parliament emphasised the fact that effective social protection of a sufficiently high quality should be based on measures to promote participation in employment, and that lowering the level of social protection should not be seen as a solution paving the way to increased levels of employment.

The resolution stressed the need for:

- policies that ensured access to lifelong learning by redistributing existing EU and national funding from workers with permanent contracts only to all workers – including the self-employed – irrespective of their contract type;
- greater efforts to implement structural reforms in order to create jobs for young people and ensure that young workers were not discriminated against through the restriction of their social security entitlements.
- speeding up the application of Articles 7 and 8 of Directive 2010/41/EU, and by providing workers at their request with flexibility regarding working hours, teleworking and part-time work for the purpose of caring for minors and dependants;
- adequate social security also for the most vulnerable groups such as the unemployed, the disabled, single-parent families, young families, the young, the elderly and pensioners;
- steps to be taken to combat all forms of discrimination in the labour market, including that against women, and to adopt social protection measures to ensure that women's pay and welfare entitlements, including pensions, are not lower than those of men doing the same job, to safeguard their maternity entitlements, to take measures to prevent the unfair dismissal of employees during pregnancy and to protect women and men with care responsibilities from unfair dismissal;
- more efforts to combat undeclared employment and precarious work, including false part-time jobs, and ensuring that all workers enjoy appropriate social protection. Parliament deplored the abuse of non-standard employment contracts in order to avoid having to comply with employment and social protection obligations;

- improved administrative cooperation between the different institutions (labour inspectorates, tax offices, municipal authorities and social security services) at national and EU level, as a means of facilitating the implementation of Union labour law provisions, and reducing undeclared work;
- ensuring that all EU migrant workers enjoy adequate social security entitlements and cover when working in another Member State;
- striking an appropriate balance between labour market security and flexibility, for example through the global implementation of flexicurity principles.

Members called on the Commission to:

- conduct an EU-wide study into whether, as a result of recent changes made to Member State labour laws, employees' social security cover has not been diminished and the principle of flexibility with security has not been infringed;
- establish a scoreboard of key employment and social indicators, which could be a first step in identifying concrete benchmarks;
- include in its proposals the four targets set in the ILO Decent Work Agenda, and to consider the targets set in the ILO Social Protection Floors Recommendation in the annual growth review, so that all workers in Europe may enjoy social protection.

Social security cover for self-employed workers: Parliament wanted to see the expansion of self-employment going hand-in-hand with appropriate social protection for the self-employed. Member States were asked to facilitate the combination of work and care responsibilities by providing workers with flexibility with regard to working hours and place of work in order to avoid a situation whereby that they have no options for flexibility other than to resort to dependent self-employment. Parliament urged Member States to ensure that self-employment does not become a means of preventing workers from benefiting from social and job security or a means for employers to circumvent labour and social security law.

It should be noted that in an amendment adopted in plenary, Parliament no longer called for social security and social protection rights to be linked to the individual rather than the working contract.

The resolution called for the following:

- more detailed, up-to-date statistics for the purpose of analysing the economic significance of self-employed workers and the various categories of self-employment;
- the inclusion of questions concerning self-employment in the EU labour force survey;
- a clear national definition of self-employment, since the absence of one increased the risk of false self-employment among EU workers and could hamper their access to adequate social security;
- exchanges between Member States and the Commission in order to provide guidance on the different forms of atypical employment and self-employment, so as to assist Member States to properly apply the relevant labour laws and social protection measures to workers so employed;
- clear means of identifying false self-employment and sanctioning employers if such cases are identified and proven;
- group insurance for occupational accidents and illness and access to collective and solidarity-based insurance and pension schemes for the self-employed;
- making information available to all citizens regarding their rights to social protection and also appropriate information for those wishing to become self-employed workers on the changes to their social protection and the labour law applicable to them arising from such a change in status.

Parliament also invited the Member States to develop, where necessary, social protection in relation to retirement, disability, maternity/paternity leave and unemployment so that social protection provisions for self-employed workers are better adapted to the needs of those workers.

Lastly, Members stressed the need to involve social partners in a process of developing and modernising social protection and developing the social dialogue at EU and national level. They encouraged social partners to exchange good practices among trade unions and professional associations on services provided to the self-employed, fighting bogus self-employment, and organising own-account self-employed workers.
